PARLIAMENTARY DEADLOCKS COMMITTEE

In 1948 a joint committee of both Tasmanian Houses of Parliament was appointed to inquire into the electoral system and the possibility of avoiding 2 parties gaining an equal number of seats at a general election. Professor L.F. Giblin, who had made suggestions on parliamentary representation in 1915, was one of the first to give evidence. In 1951 the Governor appointed Professor Lyndhurst Falkiner Giblin, with Professor Torlein Hytten and Harold James Exley, to be a Board of Enquiry into measures to overcome the likelihood of Parliamentary deadlocks. According to Professor Hytten, the Chairman, Professor Giblin was "very helpful in sorting our ideas at the beginning" but when it came to hearing evidence he was too sick and had to withdraw from the committee, leaving Professor Hytten and Mr Exley to carry on. Professor Giblin handed his papers to Professor Hytten.
